Biographical/Historical note

The registrar's office maintained a photograph file to document changes in the museum's galleries. The practice of photographing gallery views began when the museum opened in 1916, with new photographs being taken for each special exhibition or gallery renovation. Photographs usually were not taken, however, for routine rotation of artwork.

Over time the museum expanded through new additions. By 2002 the museum had expanded three times, with new wings opening in 1958, 1971, and 1984. The additional building added new galleries but also resulted in confusion about the sequence of art in the galleries. Several times the museum staff chose to renumber the galleries to make navigating the museum less confusing to the visitor. The appendix details each of the changes in gallery number, organized by each gallery's number in 2002. The following is a chronological list of the gallery changes from 1916-2002:

1916: The museum opens with fifteen galleries located solely on the second, or "gallery floor." Some additional gallery space for the education department on the ground floor is called Gallery 16.

1958: New galleries are added with the addition of the 1958 wing by Hayes and Ruth. The new galleries on the second floor are numbered sequentially after the original fifteen galleries. Some of the ground floor space is converted into galleries which are identified alphabetically

1970: The original auditorium is destroyed, along with the education department's gallery 16, and renovated as the Oriental (today the Asian) galleries, which descend into the basement as well as being located on the ground floor. These galleries are lettered sequentially after the existing first floor galleries (with the exception of Gallery T, Later Japanese Art). This is the first phase of a five-phase gallery renovation project

1971: The new wing by Marcel Breuer adds special exhibition galleries (called as such) but does not change the existing gallery sequence. This is the second phase of the five-phase gallery renovation project

1972-1976: All of the second floor galleries are overhauled as phases two through five of the gallery renovation project. On the west side of the 1958 wing gallery walls are moved. The new numbering sequence for the second floor galleries "recognizes generally the development of Western Art," according to a contemporary gallery map. First floor letter identification remains the same.

1984: The new addition by Peter van Dijk adds nine galleries adjacent to the west side of the 1958 wing. The galleries on the second floor, beginning with Gallery 29, are renumbered to incorporate the additional galleries.

1990: In November 1990 galleries on the first floor and in the Asian galleries are numbered in the 100s, replacing the alphabetical letters. All galleries on the second floor have the number 2 added in front of their number, making them all in the 200s. The special exhibition galleries are given numbers consistent with the level on which they are located. Only the education corridor on the lower level is not given a number.

Scope and Contents note

The photographs taken by the Registrar's office provide visual documentation of the history of the museum galleries. They provide information on special exhibitions, changing display practices, and capital changes to the galleries themselves. The photographs are almost all black and white 8 x 10" glossy prints, with only a few 4 x 5" and 5 x 7" prints. They are organized into three series: 1.) numbered galleries, 2.) named galleries and museum spaces, and 3.) accretions. The three series are organized numerically and alphabetically, respectively, by the number or title they were called as of February 2002. Under each gallery number or name, the photographs are organized chronologically. Folders are labeled by the gallery number or name contemporary to their date, with the current number or name (if different) listed in brackets next to the original one. Details of the gallery numbering changes are listed in the appendix, organized by the current gallery number.

If the photographs are associated with an exhibition, the exhibition title and dates are given. Because the photographs are arranged by gallery rather than exhibition, all of the photographs from the same exhibition will not be grouped together if the exhibition was held in more than one gallery. All of the gallery views in series one are of exhibitions or gallery renovations. Fewer photographs are available for the 1970s and 1980s than for other time periods. Galleries that housed a number of special exhibitions have more photographs, while galleries that generally housed only the permanent collection were photographed only after major renovations. Photographs in series two contain fewer exhibition photographs and also document some non-gallery spaces in the museum, such as the auditorium and cafeteria.

There are three exceptions to the numerical sequence in series one. First, because many of the photographs of print exhibitions spanned more than one gallery (any of galleries 104-112), multi-gallery photographs of the print galleries are located prior to the photographs of gallery 104. Second, the original Gallery 16 in the 1916 building (destroyed with the creation of the current Asian galleries) is located following the rest of the galleries on level one of the museum. Third, because the 1984 renovation of the west side of 1958 wing redesigned all of the galleries, the original galleries of the west side of the 1958 wing are grouped together under their original number. These photographs precede the photographs of the renovated galleries, listed under the current gallery number.

Beginning in 2001 photographs of permanent galleries and special exhibitions were produced digitally. Digital images are housed in the museum electronic records archive. Access may be granted by contacting the archives staff.
